Voiceover:

At the Melbourne Graduate School of Management, we have a dedicated careers centre devoted to helping you get a head start on career development.

Agnes Banyasz, Career Development Practitioner, Graduate Careers Centre Manager:

Whether you're just starting out or looking to go to the next level, we have programs to assist you to achieve your career goals. We are easily accessible to students, who can drop in for a chat, participate in one of our programs, or read through Career Minutes, our fortnightly newsletter.

Sally Capp, CEO, Committee for Melbourne, Faculty Advisory Board:

Employers are looking for smart people, and this will be demonstrated through your performance at university. Employers are looking for capable people, and this can be demonstrated through the other sorts of activities or experiences that have challenged you.

Employers are looking for engaged people, and this is demonstrated through the sorts of issues or activities that you have been involved in, which demonstrate the intellectual pursuits and interests that you have.

Voiceover:

Through Graduate Careers Centre services such as career mentoring, internship opportunities, consultations and career talks, students are able to develop these skills before coming into the workforce. That's why the kind of training and support that the GCC provides is important to Melbourne Graduate School of Management students.

Alexandre Tsymbalov, Master of Applied Commerce (International) 2007, Technical Underwriter, CGU Insurance:

I took part in the Career Mentoring Program at the Graduate Careers Centre and this helped me to develop my communication and networking skills.

Through the Mentoring Program as well as the drop in sessions I was able to get support with career direction, as well as advice on how to effectively prepare for interviews and make the most of my industry connections.

I'm now working as a technical underwriter for CGU Insurance. My role involves daily communication with brokers as well as technical analysis. The guidance and skills that I have gained at the Melbourne Graduate School of Management and the Graduate careers Centre have really helped me develop my business skills for my future career.
