Our unique study environment

Voiceover:

At the Melbourne Graduate School of Management, we are proud to offer our students a unique study environment. Smaller class sizes allow you to interact more with your fellow students and your lecturers. And when you go outside the classroom, you continue to learn virtually anywhere by staying connected. We have dedicated services and facilities that help you throughout your studies, whether you need help getting online, researching for your report or refining that essay, or you would like to speak to experts in the field who can push you towards the right direction.

The Melbourne Graduate School of Management is housed in a state-of-the-art new building. This 12-story building has a 400 seat lecture theatre, dedicated student lounges and many areas for group and individual study.

Brooke Young, Executive Director, Melbourne Graduate School of Management:

This new building has received a 5-star energy rating and will deliver numerous benefits to students. These benefits include innovative teaching and learning spaces, collaborative work areas and outstanding computing facilities.

Andrew Norbury, CEO, Metier 3:

Collaborative teaching spaces means interaction with staff in conventional lectures – that means that small groups can interact with the lecturer whilst it may very well be a large group of people. It means that the teaching spaces can be used by students outside of conventional lecture hours, and the break up and diverse nature of these teaching spaces allow for a variety of different modes of teaching.
